Meeting the challenges of Agriculture and Forestry with Commissioner Bob Odom

The recently approved Farm Bill contains significant gains for farmers and should help end the destabilizing impact of wildly fluctuating world commodity prices, Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom said.

The Farm Bill sets out provisions under which U.S. agriculture will operate for the next six years. The bill also contains the largest single increase for conservation funding in history, Odom added. "This legislation provides a much needed safety net for farmers in times of plunging world commodity prices and should eliminate the annual appeal to Congress for bail-out funding," he said. "The counter cyclical payments for program crop producers available under the bill means Congress will not be called on to provide ad hoc crop funding each year when prices are in decline."

Counter cyclical payments are federally funded payments that will go down or be eliminated when prices for crops go up on the world market. When crop prices fall below the cost of production, funding will be available to avoid widespread bankruptcies, an event that could imperil American food production.

The Congressional Budget Office projects the cost of the farm bill, formally titled "The Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002," at $45 billion above baseline spending over the six year life of the bill. Money allocated in the bill will cover farming, nutrition, trade and rural development programs. Congress has averaged appropriations totaling more than $7 billion a year or nearly $30 billion over the last four years in emergency assistance.

"The annual need to return to Congress when farmers faced natural disasters and crop price shortfalls created tremendous financial uncertainties among farmers and their lenders as to if and when funding would be available," Odom said.

"The financial uncertainties spill over into the many allied businesses and industries throughout rural America that rely on the farm community as part of their livelihoods," Odom said.

Louisiana Sens. John Breaux and Mary Landrieu voted in favor of the Conference Committee's farm bill and are pleased to see the House and Senate were able to agree on a bill that will ultimately benefit Louisiana farmers.

"This compromise farm bill was needed to address severe losses farmers suffered since the 1996 farm bill passed – with this new version providing a more reliable safety net for Louisiana farmers," said Breaux, an active supporter of federal programs critical to farmers' production for domestic and international markets. "This farm bill is crucial to the livelihood and well-being of Louisiana farmers who are now well into their 2002 planting season."

Landrieu agreed. "Passage of the farm bill comes at a critical time for our Louisiana farmers," said Landrieu, who was actively involved in the shaping of the bill. "Many, such as cotton and rice farmers, are in the fields planting already, and others are trying to determine if they are financially able to plant this year. The farm bill is a key element in their planning, as it establishes a framework that allows them to make informed economic decisions."

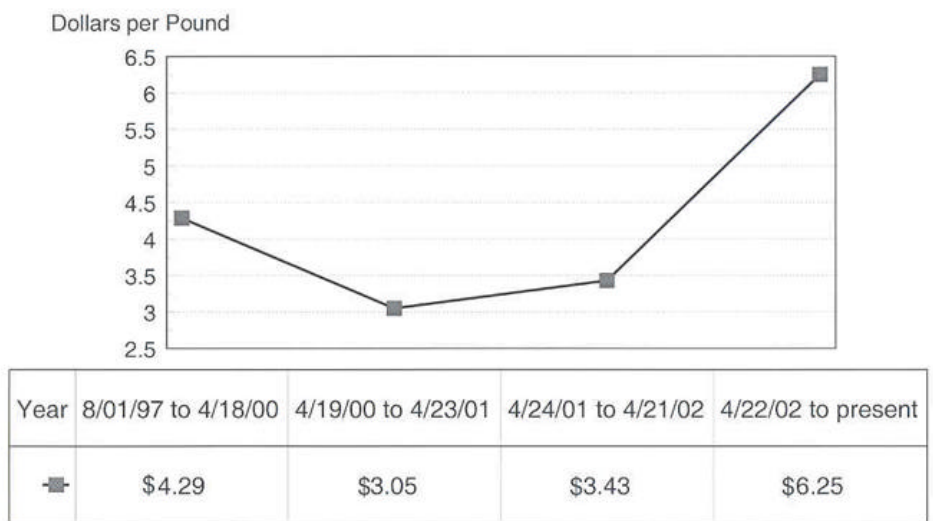

Rep. Chris John of Crowley said the farm bill is only the first step in solving the economic problems farmers currently face.

"Continued planting flexibility and the addition of a viable safety net are key components to this year's farm bill. Most encouraging is the six year authorization of these programs, rather than a dependence on yearly ad hoc assistance — giving producers the ability to make long term planting and business decisions," said John.

"This bill is an important first step in developing a sustainable plan for the Louisiana agricultural economy, but it is only the first step. Convincing Congress and the Administration to follow through on their promise to support our producers through trade opportunities and practical policy decisions comes next."

Benchmark Price for Crawfish Tailmeat from China, 1997-2002

*The benchmark price varies slightly from shipper to shipper and is not published by the Commerce Department. Values shown are calculated from public data in the Commerce formulas and apply standard assumption based on industry experience for certain elements of the Commerce calculations, such as yield, packing costs and certain other miscellaneous costs of production.

Decision raises benchmark price for Chinese crawfish tailmeat

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Bob Odom lauded last week's decision by the U.S. Department of Commerce, which raises the benchmark price of imported crawfish tailmeat as a way to end the illegal dumping of Chinese crawfish in American seafood markets.

"This is the end of the free ride enjoyed by many importers of crawfish tailmeat from China," Odom said. "Our crawfish tailmeat industry in Louisiana, by all measures, no longer exists because of the dumping of Chinese product. It's not that we don't want competition, we simply want a level playing field where our producers can still make a profit."

Commerce's decision raises the benchmark price of imported crawfish tailmeat to about $6.25 per pound. Odom said the decision also closes loopholes that have allowed importers to flood Louisiana with cheap crawfish tailmeat despite antidumping duties as high as 201 percent of the declared customs value.

"In September 1997, Commerce issued an antidumping order which required cash deposits of 90 percent to more than 201 percent on all imports of tailmeat from China," Odom explained.

"But, there were so many loopholes in the ruling that no bills were ever mailed and no money was collected. Essentially, the importers were bringing in as much cheap tailmeat as they wanted without any penalty while wiping out our tailmeat industry."

According to Odom, the new benchmark price of about $6.25 per pound results from a successful effort to persuade Commerce to use Australian crawfish prices instead of Spanish prices in the benchmark formula.

"In recent years, the benchmark price dropped to as low as $3.43 per pound and stayed there because of a collapse in crawfish prices in Spain, the third country Commerce used in its formula," Odom said.

"In fact, prior to last week's ruling, there were six Chinese shippers with duty deposit rates of zero. This decision will eliminate all of the zero rates."

The formula Commerce uses to determine the benchmark price largely depends on live crawfish prices in a third country other than the United States or China.

Choosing a third country with a free enterprise economy similar to the United States' helps in comparing costs of production and normal values, which tend to be much lower in Communist-ruled China.

After the benchmark price is set, any imports coming in below that price will face a percentage-based tariff that brings the price up to the benchmark price per pound.

Odom said the increase in the benchmark price has also dramatically increased the cash deposit required from importers. For companies that have received their own company-specific rates by applying to Commerce, the average cash deposit will rise from 36.78 percent to 93.69 percent.

For all other companies the new cash deposit rate is 223.01 percent, an increase from the previous rate of 201.63 percent.

"Despite its imperfections and complicated nature, antidumping action has been the best weapon available to limit the glut of Chinese crawfish on the market," Odom noted. "We've won this battle and we're ready for the next one."

Louisiana Mayhaws ... from the swamp to the orchard

Mayhaws are ripe, and mayhaw jelly is among the finest, most delicious jelly in the world. This is the proud assessment of the LSU AgCenter nutritionist Dr. Beth Reames.

Mayhaw color can range from a light pink through various shades of red almost to a reddish brown, the nutritionist says, noting it has a unique fragrance and “an indescribably delicious,” wild fruity flavor.

“No longer do Louisianians have to go to the swamps and the river bottoms to gather wild mayhaws to make this fabulous jelly,” Reames says, adding, “Nor do they have to go to the woods to dig up a tree.” She explains mayhaws are now available at many nurseries, particularly in Central and North Louisiana.

Research studies have been under way at several LSU AgCenter experiment stations. Extension personnel - the faculty who provide researched-based educational programs to the public - are working with a number of producers to develop orchards and expand the market for mayhaw products.

Commercial mayhaw orchards of all sizes are now in production, according to Reames. Twenty-three parishes each report from one to 65 acres planted with cultivated mayhaws, producing more than 100,000 pounds. Grant Parish leads the state with the largest number of acres as well as total pounds produced. Approximately 25,000 pounds of native mayhaws are harvested there.

Commercial production of mayhaw jelly began about 1992. The latest development was the establishment of Grant Fruit Processing by Elmer Langston, mayhaw producer in Grant Parish, and retired engineer Charlie Hutchins. This processing plant has developed a successful method to concentrate mayhaw juice, which is packaged and sold with pre-measured pectin and instructions for adding sugar and making jelly.

The nutritionist notes that a number of small home businesses also make and sell gourmet mayhaw jelly.

Reames says the mayhaw fruit resembles a round reddish apple about ½ to ¾ inches in diameter and ripens in April and early May. Traditionally, the juice has been used for making jelly and wine.

The jelly and syrup are the basic ingredients for making the number of tasty dishes, including mayhaw pecan pie, punches, cakes and ice cream toppings. They add flavor to sauces for meat, poultry and barbecue.

A Louisiana Mayhaw Association meets annually at the end of April to enhance the efforts of producers and users.

Reames says the most important thing in making jelly is to begin with a juice that has a full-bodied, mayhaw flavor. If too much water is used in cooking, the unique fragrance and taste will not match what is expected in quality jelly.

One gallon (4 quarts) or about 4½ pounds of mayhaws will yield about 12 cups of strained, flavorful juice or enough for three batches of jelly.
